FLORIDA TO BEGIN AERIAL SPRAYING TO CONTROL ZIKA

1 Florida will conduct an aerial insecticide spraying campaign at dawn on Wednesday in an effort to kill mosquitoes carrying the Zika virus, officials in Miami-Dade County said. The campaign will cover a 10-mile area that includes the 1-mile-square area just north of downtown Miami that health officials have identified as the hub of Zika transmission in the state, the officials said on Tuesday. On Monday, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention issued an unprecedented travel warning, urging pregnant women to avoid travel to the Miami neighborhood at the center of the investigation. Florida health officials announced another non-travel-related case of Zika on Tuesday, bringing the total to 15. REUTERS

WASHINGTON POLICE OFFICER CHARGED WITH HELPING ISLAMIC STATE

2 A Washington transit police officer was arrested on charges he attempted to provide material support to Islamic State, the U.S. Justice Department said, the first member of law enforcement facing such charges involving a government-designated terrorist group. In July, Nicholas Young, who lives in Virginia, sent codes for gift cards worth $245 to an FBI informant. The gift cards were intended for mobile-messaging accounts that Islamic State uses to recruit its followers. Young believed the informant he was messaging was an acquaintance who was working with the militant group, according to court records. Young, who had worked for the transit authority since 2003, had been on the radar of federal law enforcement since 2010, according to an affidavit in the complaint filed in U.S. district court in Virginia on Tuesday. N. KOREA MISSILE LAUNCH LANDS NEAR JAPAN WATERS, ALARMS TOKYO

3 North Korea launched a ballistic missile on Wednesday that landed in or near Japanese-controlled waters for the first time, the latest in a series of launches by the isolated country in defiance of United Nations Security Council resolutions. The main body of the missile landed in Japan's economic exclusion zone, a Japanese defence official said, escalating regional tensions that were already high after a series of missile launches this year and the decision by the United States to place a sophisticated anti-missile system in South Korea.

Boston Cab owner Tutunjian arrested on federal charges

Edward J. Tutunjian was charged with tax evasion and other federal crimes.

ALEXIS SACHDEV

The longtime owner of Boston Cab was arrested Tuesday for several federal crimes related to labor and fraud, the U.S Attorney's Office said in a statement.

Edward J. Tutunjian, who's owned the taxi company for more than four decades, faces charges of payroll tax evasion, employing undocumented workers and with failing to pay overtime wages. He owned more than 372 taxi medallions by 2014, and was bringing in millions of dollars of revenue each year, mostly in cash.

A 2013 investigation by The Boston Globe estimated Tutunjian owns about one-fifth of the city's medallions, each worth approximately $600,000.

Tutunjian, 66, of Belmont, owns EJT Management Inc., through which he ran Boston Cab. EJT is also charged with defrauding the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development by enabling EJT employees to obtain federal housing subsidies to which they were not entitled.

The attorney's office alleges EJT and Tutunjian were also defrauding the IRS by hiring a number of employees not permitted to work in the country due to their immigration status, and paid them partly or entirely in cash. And when employees worked more than a 40-hour week, Tutunjian would not pay them the required time-and-a-half rate on their paychecks, but rather the regular-time rate in cash.

Tutunjian and EJT have both signed plea agreements to make full restitution for their crimes, totaling more than $1.3 million to the IRS for taxes, interest and penalties, and nearly $700,000 to employees for unpaid overtime wages.

IRS agents raided Boston Cab headquarters in May 2013 after the Globe investigation found widespread exploitation in the taxi industry.

According to that investigation, Tutunjian, a Jordanian-born mogul, built a business empire with his cab business, parking lots and garages, apartment buildings, high-interest lending schemes and Chilean vineyards.

In all, his businesses are estimated to be worth about a quarter-billion dollars.

Man, 90, charged with soliciting a prostitute

A 90-year-old Dennis Port man was arrested after he reportedly told police a woman he hired as a prostitute stole a necklace from his bathroom.

Nicholas Salerno allegedly paid Karen Proia, 48, of West Dennis, $100 last June in exchange for a sex act, the Cape Cod Times reported. He later told police that Proia stole a necklace from his bathroom, which investigators reportedly later recovered at a coin dealer in South Yarmouth.

When an officer told Salerno he'd be arrested for soliciting a prostitute, Salerno replied "I don't give a (expletive). I'm 90 years old ..." according to court documents obtained by the Times.

Proia is charged with larceny and prostitution, and Salerno with soliciting a prostitute. They both pleaded not guilty at their arraignments Tuesday, per the Times. CHRIS CAESAR

First medical marijuana dispensary opens in Boston

Four years after residents voted to legalize pot, patients' eligibility was checked by an armed guard before being escorted in.

CHRIS CAESAR
@MetroBOS
chris.caesar@metro.us

Boston's first medical marijuana dispensary opened its doors Wednesday, barely three months before state residents vote Nov. 8 on legalizing recreational use of the drug.

The dispensary at 21 Milk Street is the seventh in the state and the second owned by Massachusetts provider Patriot Care, which plans to open a third location in Greenfield.

"Being the first dispensary permitted to open in the city of Boston is a privilege for every member of our local and national organization," Nicholas Vita, the CEO of Patriot Care's parent company, Columbia Care, said in a statement.

The dispensary is located inside an old bank building with a relatively nondescript entrance. Inside, patients will first interact with an armed guard who will verify they possess an active medical marijuana patient card.

From there, the patient meets with a receptionist, who confirms the customer hasn't exceeded the monthly purchase limit.

After that, the patient is escorted into a waiting room and later the display room. A salesperson then accompanies the patient and tries to pair him with the kind of THC delivery mechanism that will best suit his needs.

According to a menu on the group's website, there's a lot: famous strains like Sour Kush and Northern Lights are also joined by newcomers like Amnesia CBD. All the strains are accompanied by ratings from the Leafly app, similar to a Yelp rating app for marijuana strains.

Edibles are also available in various strengths, along with accessories like rolling papers.

"Patients should treat marijuana for medical use products like they would any other medications that may impair the ability to perform complex tasks," the website notes. "Avoid operating a motor vehicle or heavy machinery, avoid child or elder care, and avoid making important decisions while under treatment."

The dispensary is also featuring a "grand opening" sale, including up to 15 percent off of an ounce of marijuana.

Father Joe Quinn, who works at Saint Anthony's Shrine in Downtown Crossing, told State House News Service that he was celebrating the fact he could now get his medicine only two blocks from his church.

The dispensary DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

"This is a blessing," Quinn said at the opening Tuesday. "Medical marijuana has dramatically changed and helped my life and the quality of it."

Patients were lined up outside the dispensary for the 1 p.m. opening, but were quickly served, leaving just some curious bystanders outside.

Bill Newsham, from Acton, said he worked right down the street from the location, and was curious to see what all the fuss was about.

"I think I've never seen a dispensary before in person, just kind of read about them or heard about them on the news," he said. "To me, it's almost like the official arrival of this. It's something people voted on ... in Massachusetts back in 2012, and so it seems like it's taken a long time for dispensaries to actually come about, and there's been a lot of red tape.

"But the fact that one is right here, smack dab in the middle of downtown Boston, it's probably the biggest splash any of them has ever made [in the state], because it's right here in the business district," he said.

State House News Service and photographer Derek Kouyoumjian contributed to this article.

Clinton campaign studying alternative to ethanol mandate

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's campaign has solicited advice from California regulators on how to revamp a federal regulation requiring biofuels like corn-based ethanol be blended into the nation's gasoline supply, according to campaign and state officials.

The move is the clearest sign yet that, if elected, Clinton would seek to adjust the regulation, called the Renewable Fuel Standard, possibly hurting her chances in corn-growing states like Iowa where she faces a tough battle against Donald Trump in the Nov. 8 election.

The Renewable Fuel Standard, created by Congress in 2005, mandates that transportation fuel sold in the U.S. contain a minimum volume of renewable fuels.

Gas pump GETTY IMAGES

It was intended to cut greenhouse gas emissions and expand the U.S. renewable fuels sector while lowering reliance on imported oil. It is opposed by the oil industry and environmentalists and has been criticized as a mere subsidy to corn producers.

Clinton advisers have contacted the California Air Resources Board to discuss whether a policy like the Low Carbon Fuel Standard, a market-based system rather than a mandate, could be applied at a national level to replace or augment the Renewable Fuel Standard, CARB officials said. REUTERS

Man convicted in deadly 1963 Alabama church bombing denied parole

A 78-year-old man convicted in the infamous 1963 Birmingham, Alabama, church bombing that killed four young black girls during a Sunday morning service was denied parole on Wednesday, a spokeswoman for the state parole board said.

One-time Ku Klux Klan member Thomas Blanton was convicted in 2001 of four counts of murder and sentenced to life in prison for the racially motivated attack on the 16th Street Baptist Church.

"This is a crime that left an imprint on the entire nation," Jefferson County District Attorney Brandon Falls said during the hearing in Montgomery, Alabama, where he urged the state board to deny Blanton's early release. "Thomas Blanton has not served his debt to society."

Addie Mae Collins, Carol McNair, Carole Robertson and Cynthia Wesley, aged 11 to 14, were killed in the blasts that ripped through their Sunday school. The bombing injured 22 others.

Family members of the slain girls spoke at Wednesday's hearing, pleading with the parole board to keep Blanton behind bars. The packed hearing room erupted in applause when the board announced its ruling, video posted online by a reporter with the Birmingham News showed.

It was the first time Blanton, who spent more than three decades free after the crime, was eligible for early release. Under Alabama law he will next be up for parole in 2021.

In 1977, Robert Chamblis was the first to be prosecuted and convicted of murder in the bombing following then-Alabama Attorney General Bill Baxley's request for the case to be reopened.

In 2000, the FBI announced Blanton, Bobby Cherry and Herman Cash also had carried out the crime. Blanton and Cherry both were convicted; Cash died before being charged. REUTERS

Obama administration denies Iran cash payment was ransom for prisoners

The Obama administration said on Wednesday that $400 million in cash paid to Iran soon after the release of five Americans detained by Tehran was not ransom for them as some Republicans have charged.

The five, including Washington Post reporter Jason Rezaian, were released on Jan. 16 in exchange for seven Iranians held in the United States for sanctions violations. The prisoner deal coincided with the lifting of international sanctions against Tehran.

At the time, the United States said it had settled a longstanding Iranian claim at the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal in The Hague, releasing $400 million in funds frozen since 1981, plus $1.3 billion in interest that was owed to Iran.

Barack Obama GETTY IMAGES

The funds were part of a trust fund Iran used before its 1979 Islamic Revolution to buy U.S. military equipment that was tied up for decades in litigation at the tribunal.

"The link between prisoner release and payment to Iran are completely false," State Department spokesman John Kirby said on Twitter in response to a Wall Street Journal article that Washington secretly organized the cash airlift.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest heatedly beat back suggestions the money transfer to Iran was ransom, or a secret.

"The United States, under President Obama, has not paid a ransom to secure the release of Americans unjustly detained in Iran and we're not going to pay a ransom," he said at a daily White House briefing.

Earnest said the Republicans who have long opposed the Iran nuclear deal are seizing on how the money was paid to Iran as a way to undermine the deal. "They're struggling to justify their opposition to our engagement with Iran," he said.

Republican Party chief angered by Trump's refusal to back House speaker

Reince Priebus was furious over the failure to endorse Ryan, who is the most senior elected Republican.

Donald Trump's White House campaign was in turmoil on Wednesday, with a senior Republican Party official furious over his criticism of a dead soldier's family and his refusal to back the re-election campaign of House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan.

Trump hit back on Tuesday at critics in the Republican leadership who have taken him to task for his insistent public dispute with the parents of the soldier, a Muslim U.S. Army captain killed in the Iraq war. In a revolt against the party, he denied both House Speaker Paul Ryan and Sen. John McCain support in their re-election bids.

Reince Priebus worked to bring Trump into the party's fold despite the New York businessman's status as an outsider. Trump, who had never previously run for public office, broke with party orthodoxy as he beat 16 rivals to become the White House nominee for the Nov. 8 election.

Ahead of last month's Republican Party convention, the RNC sought to rally the fractured party behind Trump. Priebus feels burned by Trump's string of self-inflicted wounds and his refusal to observe basic decorum by giving Ryan his support.

Trump, who made his comments about Ryan and McCain in an interview with The Washington Post, shrugged off the growing party backlash.

"There is great unity in my campaign, perhaps greater than ever before. I want to thank everyone for your tremendous support. Beat Crooked H!" he wrote on Twitter early on Wednesday, referring to his Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton.

Campaign manager Paul Manafort sought to reinforce the message, telling Fox News Channel the campaign was moving in a positive direction, with the candidate himself in control.

"The campaign is in very good shape. We are organized. We are moving forward," Manafort said.

However, a Republican source said Manafort was struggling to get the candidate back on message.

Trump's always unruly campaign has been wracked by turmoil in recent days. On Monday, he fired a senior adviser, Ed Brookover, who had been hired to serve as a liaison between the campaign and the Republican National Committee.

Facebook to let emerging market companies sell through their pages

Facebook Inc. will let small businesses in emerging markets sell to customers for free through their Facebook pages, the social media company said on Wednesday, marking a new effort to build up potential advertisers in its fastest-growing regions.

The move is Facebook's latest foray onto online commerce in emerging markets. The company launched a service last year allowing some merchants to sell items through paid ads on Facebook's app. The latest service will instead be free, and users can view products through merchants' own Facebook pages.

Facebook GETTY IMAGES

By making sellers more reliant on Facebook, the company hopes that more businesses in emerging markets will eventually decide to become paying advertisers.

"If a business is seeing value from their page, there is a higher opportunity that they could be an advertiser," said Benji Shomair, product marketing director of Facebook Pages, in an interview.

Facebook, whose stock hit its all-time high last week after reporting sharp growth in ad sales, has about 3 million active advertisers. But there are more than 60 million businesses worldwide using its service that can set up pages for free in an attempt to reach more customers out of Facebook's 1.7 billion global monthly users.

Southeast Asia is Facebook's fastest-growing region for users, but it still makes far more money off users in the United States and Canada. The company made average revenue of $13.74 per North American user in the second quarter, compared with an average of $1.74 per user in the Asia-Pacific region.

The hugely popular Facebook app and website has largely saturated Western markets and is turning to emerging markets for growth, both in users and advertising dollars.

THE FUN STARTS HERE

Jared Leto brings the crazy

The actor says reading what they say about you on social media is "like eating you own vomit."

LUCÍA HERNÁNDEZ
Metro World News
letters@metro.us

"Have you seen the movie? Did you like it? Do you think the Joker is OK?," Jared Leto rattles off as soon as we sit down. The Oscar-winner is eager to get the verdict on his performance of the Joker in new movie "Suicide Squad" — but he doesn't dare read fans' reactions on social media. After all, Gotham City's resident madman has been played by some of the greats: Jack Nicholson, Mark Hamill (who voiced him in the animated series) and, of course, Heath Ledger, whose performance Leto describes as "perfect."

When do you plan to see the movie?
I won't! I haven't even watched the trailers.

How did you feel about the character when you read the script?
The Joker is a character so alive, so nuanced that you can't put all of it on a page. It's a dream. He is the most tridimensional character I've ever played. I played some wild ones before, but the Joker is a character without any rules. There is no right or wrong answer. I can jump on the table and pull my hands down or cut your lips off — they are both good choices. He is out of his mind in such an intoxicated way. In his mind, the sun, the Earth, the moon are all orbiting around him. So it's a really powerful place to be. It's really fun. Could you tell I was having fun?

Yes. And this Joker has a mob mentality.
Yeah. We looked at cartel leaders. I'm not going to say which one in particular. You can see the gold medallion, some of the bling and the outfits, which are very much like a cartel leader.

Which Joker outfit was your favorite?
I liked the tuxedo, it's the best. There's something about the elegance that made it feel really good.

What has been the feedback so far?
I haven't had any feedback. Until now I haven't talked to anyone who has seen the movie. You know, the people could love it or hate it. I don't know. I did the best that I could do. I worked the hardest that I could work. I was the bravest that I could be. And that's all I can really ask of myself.

You mention Heath Ledger who left quite an imprint on that character. Did any inspiration come from him?
I think the inspiration that Heath gave me was the fearlessness that he had. Heath gave a perfect performance. It was so beautiful. Not only was it just the perfect villain or the perfect Joker. It was one of the best performances in film. If you look at what he did in that movie, it's absolutely incredible, but you can't go anywhere near what he did. He did one, Jack Nicholson made another … The good thing about their Jokers is that they're so good that you have to go in a total different direction. So, for me, it was actually a blessing that there have been these beautiful performances, because I knew we had to walk a whole new path.

Are you planning at some point to read what they say about your Joker on social media?
No, no, no. Why would I do that? It would be like eating my own vomit. It's the craziest thing you can do in the internet era. You know, that's why I do music. The connection that a gig gives me is the closest I can be to the fans. That's why we [Thirty Seconds to Mars] are making a new album.

Hannibal Buress seems to hate dumb interviews. Especially after the hundredth reporter asks him about "that Cosby joke," and he hangs up the phone. But we're not talking about Cosby, and that's fine. There's plenty to discuss.

The 33-year-old Chicago native has been going nonstop. The fourth season of Adult Swim's late night talk show "The Eric Andre Show" premieres Aug. 5, a few months after the third season of Comedy Central's "Broad City" ended and "The Secret Life of Pets" debuted in theaters. Roles in Joe Swanberg's new Netflix series "Easy" and anticipated films like "Spider-Man: Homecoming" and "Baywatch" are also on the horizon.

On "Eric Andre," Buress appears as the straight-laced sidekick to the totally chaotic host — except the rare charged moment, like when he kicks guest Flava Flav in the face.

Wait, what?

"Didn't you watch the trailer?," Buress asks in disbelief. "Watch it again."

When you're in New York, how often do you get stopped by people calling you Lincoln?
A couple times a week — I used to correct people. I used to say, "Hey, Lincoln is a character. My name is Hannibal." But now I just let it go.

What's going on with season four of "Eric Andre"?
It's gonna be the same thing, just different people. We've got some good guests, and they're getting weirdly better each season. That's something I'm surprised by; like, how are we still getting people to do this? It's going to get weirder. I know I'm being vague.

Is it still weird when the cameras stop rolling?
When the cameras stop rolling, I'll go to the office and check email, make some phone calls, write two jokes, listen to music — it's low-key crazy stuff.

What are you listening to now?
Oddisee's "Catching Vibes," and this track I had on repeat yesterday was one that came up on Pandora. It's called "The Pseudo Nymph," by Flying Lotus, and it's got [DJ] Thundercat playing over it. It's a good motivation, get-going song. I listened to it like eight times.

Speaking of, can we chat for a minute about your DJ name — DJ Burgerfeet? Where did that come from?
I've got ugly feet, so I decided to say DJ Burgerfeet because my feet look like hamburger meat.

That's incredibly graphic.
Thank you.

Going back to "Broad City," what's going to happen to Lincoln? Is he done with the show now that he and Ilana broke up?
No, I don't know anything. I don't write for that show.

All right, then what do you hope happens to Lincoln?
I hope he gets his own dental practice and franchises out and moves to the Midwest, like Chicago. New York is going to fall into the ocean anyway, so he should get out of there.

What are you keeping backstage at your live show? Any demands?
Some snacks — some almonds, pineapple, water, orange juice, whiskey, ginger ale, vegetable with ranch and some local beer. That's my rider. That's an exclusive.

Weirder, harder and more difficult than ever

Dillinger Escape Plan gears up for their sixth studio release.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Dillinger Escape Plan believes in crowd participation — whether you're holding them up as they crowd surf, or Snapchatting their gnarly wounds from taking a dive that went too far.

The Jersey-bred mathcore band is hitting a series of club venues ahead of the release of their sixth studio full-length release, "Dissociation," on Oct. 14. The album comes via guitarist Ben Weinman's Party Smasher Inc. label, a decision that gives the band a unique edge when it comes to production, marketing and, well, almost anything having to do with its release. In true multitasker fashion, Weinman calls from his car just weeks before their tour to check in.

What was the plan going forward with club venues this tour?
We wanted to do it that way. It'll be interesting, because it's way more exhausting to play those small rooms, but people think it's the other way around. It's intense and so hot and hard to navigate [in smaller venues], but the energy is so amazing.

But you're known to get really ... um, active, in the crowd. Hanging from pipes, crowd surfing, etc. Is that going to fly in these smaller spaces?
I was talking to our agent and he was surprised that not one of the promoters said anything about restrictions. We've been banned from almost every club in the world, but it's proof that time heals everything.

When did the extreme crowd interaction begin for you as a band?
We were literally playing basements, on the floor or a VFW Hall stage [when we first started]. That kind of chemistry with an audience in those scenarios is unavoidable.

Also, in those days, it was an opportunity to shake off the week. I was in college working some job, and the other guys were in school, and we were normal, respectable people. The weekends were an opportunity to have uninhibited free expression. A lot of people were like, "Wow you seem so angry on stage," and they're surprised when we're all so well mannered. And I'm like, "Why are you surprised? We just happen to have the opportunity to express ourselves in a healthy way."

From your own perspective, you get to see the artist management and production side of things, as well as the creative. What's it like for you to compartmentalize your work?
It's weird because I'm an artist, and artists suck. They're really difficult. I had to learn how to manage my own artistic anxieties and compulsiveness in order to be well rounded enough to deal with people in a band from a band perspective, and then also from a label's perspective.

I care so much about how an album is released and perceived, and that's good, because it's more than business. To me, good business is always about being honest and promoting something you believe in. It's great to have the ability to conduct the business side with the ethics and values of an artist.

On that note, what can you tell us about the upcoming album?
We're finished. We handed in the final master. I did all the artwork for the album, and our drummer took a few photos. It's totally f—ing DIY, every aspect of it.

What about from a sound perspective? Musically, where does it lie?
Ultimately, we think it's weirder and harder and more difficult than the last. It's hard to be objective during the process, but it does remind me of the time of our first album, "Calculating Infinity." It sounds different, not necessarily because of the songwriting; the tones and frequencies don't sound like any other record I've heard productionwise. It's a standout in our catalog in terms of sound.

things to do

Summer stage

Your first impulse upon visiting the Berkshires is to jump in a lake. Or hike a trail. Or buy some artisanal jam. But the region's array of top-shelf theater offers a good reason to head indoors. This is where theater artists from New York and Boston come for an onstage summer vacation. Here are some shows not to miss. JEREMY D. GOODWIN

"The Pirates of Penzance"

Barrington Stage Company
Now through Aug. 13
barringtonstageco.org
This Gilbert and Sullivan chestnut gets a fresh shine in a big, boisterous production that just may be the Berkshires hit of the summer. The dashing Will Swenson (Mr. Audra McDonald, by the way) stars alongside a boatload of other Broadway veterans. The director and choreographer are the same team that created a winning revival of "On the Town" at Barrington Stage that went to Broadway two years ago. Will "Pirates" sail on, too?

"The Merchant of Venice"

Shakespeare & Co.
Now through Aug. 21
shakespeare.org
This stylish, fast-paced interpretation opens with a dance number and throws fresh light on one of Shakespeare's more politically problematic plays. Is it anti-Semitic or just about anti-Semitism? Director Tina Packer says it's the latter, and this production's provocative moments will have you talking long after you leave the theater. Jonathan Epstein's performance as Shylock will stay with you.

"The Stone Witch"

Berkshire Theatre Group
Now through Aug. 20
berkshiretheatregroup.org
You know Judd Hirsch from a million and a half roles, from "Taxi" to "Independence Day: Resurgence." He makes his BTG debut as an irascible author of children's books who duels with his own past and the sometimes-scary power of imagination. Rupak Ginn plays the young writer dispatched to pull him out of his shell. This tightly drawn world premiere has layers that go deep beneath the surface ... and into the woods.

"An American Daughter"

Williamstown Theatre Festival
Aug. 3-21
wtfestival.org
Wendy Wasserstein's 1997 play about a woman who encounters opposition after being nominated for U.S. attorney general arrives just in time for the summer of Hillary vs. Trump. Look for director Evan Cabnet to bring a topical edge to this story. Also catch "Poster Boy," a world premiere musical running through Aug. 7 that tells the story of the suicide of Tyler Clementi through the lens of the online forum on which he used to post.

"Twelfth Night"

Shakespeare & Co. at The Mount
Now through Aug. 20
shakespeare.org
This is one of Shakespeare's greatest comedies, and guaranteed to be a hoot. Catch it in a version by Shakespeare & Co.'s actors-in-training, outdoors at The Mount, Edith Wharton's Berkshires home. And if the tranquil setting puts you in a Wharton mood, you can also catch two adaptations of her work by Pythagoras Theater Works in a double bill running through Aug. 5 in the intimate setting of West Stockbridge's old Town Hall.

Juliette Lewis has a vegetable-filled tour rider. PROVIDED

The actress revisits her other side as rock 'n' roll bandleader.

JEREMY D. GOODWIN
letters@metro.us

We love actress Juliette Lewis for her many fierce performances — from Martin Scorsese's "Cape Fear" to her current role on ABC's "Secrets and Lies." But she's a committed rocker, too.

This summer sees the 43-year-old's first U.S. tour in several years following the disbandment and reunion of Juliette and the Licks, just months after Michael Rapaport's career-spanning doc, "Hard Lovin' Woman," debuted at Tribeca. Now, she'll tour with Rage Against the Machine's Brad Wilk, collaborator Juan Alderete of Mars Volta and former Licks collaborator Todd Morse, as a new EP takes shape.

Ever the multitasker, Lewis spoke with us on the phone from outside a grocery store in Los Angeles.

Your single "Hello Hero" has a dancier feel to it than your other stuff. Is all the new material like that?

It's funny 'cause "Hello, Hero" has this big bottom end and a big, funky bass. And the next single is a song called "Any Way You Want" that's really soulful rock and roll. Those are the two sides of me. There's this ferocious little rocker and then a girl who wants to celebrate and take everybody with me and have a dance party.

When it comes to music, what do you consider to be success?

For me, it begins and ends with my live show. Maybe we'll have more vegetables on our rider. Not more booze — more organic vegetables! That's success. I'm not working for a label. This is a labor of love. I work for the people! And my heart, and my soul.

How is the emotional release different with music versus acting?

Music is instantaneous. I can be feeling frustration, confusion, longing, joy and I can write a song in 10 minutes and play the song that night, and have people ride that wave with me. And that's totally liberating.

They're both storytelling, but acting is more insular. I love disappearing into the emotional truths of a different person. So music is my truth and acting is ultimately the complexities of humanity told through other peoples' stories.

You've said you listened to Jimi Hendrix every day while filming "Natural Born Killers," to help create the character of Mallory. Have you done that for other roles?

For "Cape Fear," I was listening to all '50s girl groups like the Shirelles, the Chantells, and also Ella Fitzgerald and Billie Holiday — all these girls just singing about longing. There was something slightly juvenile in it, because that's a pubescent heart — it's all about your relationship to love, or the wanting of a man.

The beautiful thing about music is that within 10 seconds, from just a note or a sound, you can feel. It's a shortcut to one's emotion.

EAT LIKE AN INSIDER

Andy Husbands

He recommends the Atomic Buffalo Turds —and believe us, they're good. GOOD LIFE PRODUCTIONS

It was only a matter of time before champion pitmaster Andy Husbands decided to open a barbecue joint of his own. The chef behind Tremont 647 recently opened doors at The Smoke Shop, a Kendall Square eatery boasting Korean-style brisket served with Gochujang-ranch dipping sauce and platters of his award-winning ribs served with pimento mac and cheese.

The Seattle-native and "Hell's Kitchen" alumnus shares with us his favorite spots to grab a bite and the therapeutic slurp of shabu shabu.

Best late night meal?

I love Hojoko because the cocktails are delicious and a lot of fun. They also have this great menu item called Wasabi Roulette, where you don't really know what you are getting. It is an entertaining way to try items that you may not have known about, or eat more wasabi than anticipated. 1271 Boylston St., Boston, 617-670-0507, hojokoboston.com

Best meal under $5?

When I lived in Dorchester, my favorite cheap eat was the Double Double from Singh's Roti Shop. It's a spicy chickpea roti that had a real kick to it. I still crave it now, so even though I don't live in the neighborhood anymore, I still go by and grab it on occasion. Word to the wise: Always grab extra napkins, you'll need them! 692 Columbia Road, Dorchester, 617-282-7977, singhsrotishop.net

Best foodie gem?

The best gem is some of the smoked food that John Delpha is doing at the Rosebud Diner in Somerville. He sometimes has something called ABT on his menu, which stands for Atomic Buffalo Turds. Doesn't sound appealing, but they are his awesome take on a jalapeno popper. He stuffs jalapenos with cream cheese and wraps them in bacon before he smokes them in his smoker. 381 Summer St., Somerville, 617-629-9500, rosebudkitchen.com

Best place to dine alone?

When I am solo, I head to Kaze in Chinatown and sit at the bar. I order hot pot and it is very meditative to enjoy the act of shabu shabu and eating noodles. It's a calming way to eat. 1 Harrison Ave., Boston, 617-338-8283, kazeshabushabu.com RACHEL RACZKA

Sun, sand — and no crowds

Get to these under-the-radar beaches for a truly relaxing summer getaway.

Fodor's Travel

Trips to the beach are standard fare for most summer travelers, but crowded stretches of sand can make vacations more of a pain than a pleasure. But there are beaches that offer a peaceful retreat, allowing visitors to escape the crowds at more popular destinations.

Roque Bluffs

Rustic scenery and sprawling landscapes make Roque Bluffs one of the best little-known beach destinations in Maine. Visitors can explore 274 acres of coastal scenery, including a picturesque, half-mile pebbled beach. Take a dip in Simpson Pond, a popular swimming hole, or hike along the beach's rocky cliffs.

Dry Tortugas

Only accessible by boat or plane, the Dry Tortugas of Florida are located 70 miles off the shore of Key West, and consist of seven small islands and a sprawling coral reef. History buffs can explore Fort Jefferson, a 19th century building that once held political prisoners. For epic snorkeling and diving, head to offshore coral heads.

Sandbridge Beach

Most beachgoers have heard of Virginia Beach, but few are familiar with its tiny neighbor to the south. Located 15 miles from the resort area, Sandbridge features pristine dunes; explore the marshes and open waters of Back Bay National Wildlife Refuge or kayak and hike through False Cape State Park.

Cumberland Island

Georgia's Cumberland Island has it all. The 18-mile beach features unspoiled marshes, dunes and largely untouched forests. Beachgoers can stroll under dense canopies of live oaks or watch wild horses roam across pristine beaches. The public can only access the island via ferry, making it one of the state's most secluded getaways.

Cumberland Island FACEBOOK

Enderts Beach

Hidden away in California's Redwood National Park, this beach features 37 miles of coastline surrounded by towering, 350-foot evergreen trees. Dramatic coastlines and peaceful surroundings give the area an appeal all its own: Hike to the 500-foot overlook off Enderts Beach Trail for unparalleled views of the forest and ocean, or settle down near the coast with an afternoon picnic.

Folly Beach

Also known as Lowcountry's summer playground, South Carolina's Folly Beach offers a variety of water sports and attractions. Swimmers and surfers can hang ten at Folly's Washout, and take in ocean views from the beach's popular pier. The town is also home to delicious seafood; enjoy the day's catch at restaurants overlooking the water.

Awahua Beach

Few beaches top Hawaii's Awahua in sheer beauty and rich natural history. The isolated stretch of sand remains less developed than the state's other islands; reach the picturesque coastline via a hiking trail or take in breathtaking views of the cliffs and water from a public lookout next to the trailhead. One drawback: The strong current makes the water too turbulent for swimming.

The 2016 Olympics officially open with Friday night's opening ceremony at Rio de Janeiro's Maracanã Stadium (7 p.m., NBC), an iconic soccer venue that's hosted matches since 1950.

And despite controversies about venues not being ready, polluted water, the Zika virus and more, the Olympics will go on as planned. Here are five U.S.-centered storylines to follow:

1 Women's gymnastics

Who can forget the drama during the 2012 Olympics in London, which ended with American Gabby Douglas winning the women's all-around gold medal and the U.S. women grabbing the team title? In 2016, Douglas is back for more — as is Aly Raisman. It's rare for gymnasts to dominate at more than one Olympics because of the stresses the sport puts on their bodies, but this year we'll see two returnees.

The U.S. women do have some different faces on their roster, of course. Simone Biles is the new star, and she's the favorite on the squad to win the all-around title — which would give the U.S. its fourth straight individual all-around gold medal. Women's artistic gymnastics in Rio begins Aug. 7.

2 Swimming

He's the greatest Olympian of all time, given his 22 Olympic medals (18 gold, two silver, two bronze). Michael Phelps retired after the London Olympics and swore to everyone that he was done with the sport. Four years later, he's the first U.S. male swimmer to compete on five Olympic teams.

The 31-year-old Phelps is older and wiser now, has a 3-month-old son and is engaged to be married sometime after Rio. He's competing in three individual events this month: the 100-meter and 200-meter butterfly, and the 200-meter individual medley. He'll likely be on two relays as well — the 4x100-meter freestyle and the 4x100-meter medley. Swimming events begin Aug. 6.

3 Women's team sports

The U.S. women's soccer team is looking to win its fourth straight gold medal, while the U.S. women's basketball squad hopes to keep its 41-game Olympic winning streak alive — which dates back to the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona — and win a sixth straight gold medal.

Both squads are heavy favorites in Rio.

The hoops team is led by Sue Bird, Brittney Griner, Tamika Catchings and Diana Taurasi, while the soccer team has Hope Solo, Carli Lloyd and Alex Morgan back for another games. Women's basketball in Rio begins Aug. 6 and women's soccer started Wednesday.

4 Track and field

It's said that the men's Olympic decathlon champion is the world's greatest athlete, thanks to the grueling event that includes 10 individual track and field events over two days. American Ashton Eaton won the 2012 gold medal and won both the 2013 and 2015 outdoor world championship to boot.

In Rio, Eaton is on the shortlist to maintain his status as the world's greatest athlete.

Men's decathlon will be contested Aug. 17-18 and includes the following events: 100 meters, long jump, shot put, high jump, 400 meters, 100-meter hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and 1,500 meters.

5 Women's triathlon

Two women are hoping to swim, bike and run themselves onto the podium in triathlon, a sport that's only been in the Olympics since 2000.

Sarah True and Gwen Jorgensen competed in the London Olympics. They've both enjoyed success since finishing out of medal contention at those games, and enter the Rio competition as medal contenders.

The U.S. has one Olympic triathlon medal, a bronze in 2004 thanks to Susan Williams. The event involves swimming 1,500 meters in open water, cycling 40 kilometers (24.8 miles) and running 10 kilometers (6.2 miles). The women's triathlon is scheduled for Aug. 20.

Aries A social event will lead to an offer that makes sense to you. Dig deeper and find out what all the requirements are before you move forward. There is no harm in listening.

Taurus Tread carefully when dealing with emotional issues. Use your brain, not brawn, to deal with matters and you will avoid a force play that will leave you in a precarious position.

Gemini Consider ways to make your home and domestic scene more inviting. Walk away from anyone trying to entice you to engage in social activities that are expensive or risky.

Cancer A partnership will play an important role in the way situations unfold today. A past experience will prompt you to make a wise decision in the present. Don't fold under pressure.

Leo Consider your options when it comes to how you are living and the conditions you are faced with. Get some muscle behind you and make suitable improvements.

Virgo An event will give you the opportunity to put your attributes on display. Suggestions followed by prompt action will reinforce what you can bring to any organization you join.

Libra Talk to the people you feel will do the most for you and air your ideas or complaints. The response you get will give you the courage to go ahead with your plans.

Scorpio Stay motivated and on track. Don't let personal matters interfere with business and your financial gains. Keep your business and social lives separate. Responsibilities come first.

Sagittarius Take things one step at a time. If you crowd your timetable, you aren't likely to complete anything. A personal adjustment will help you function better and accomplish more.

Capricorn You'll be drawn to the unusual. An interesting personal change will result in a financial opportunity. Good timing will be crucial if you are going to come out on top.

Aquarius A chance to do something that will boost your confidence should be first and foremost. If you look good and feel good, you will reach your maximum goal.

Pisces You'll be sensitive, caring and easy to manipulate. Before you give in to someone's sob story, consider your personal needs. Don't invest what you can't afford to give. EUGENIA LAST
